MARKET COMMENTARY
REVIEW:

In 2019, the monetary authority turned dovish with a 50bps cut in the Monetary Policy Rate (MPR) at its committee meeting in March. The apex bank further reduced OMO rates by 100bps on average in May and July, effectively reducing yields by 200bps at the start of Q3'19.

The Central Bank in a bid to drive economic growth and reduce borrowing cost and currency pressures issued a new policy directive effectively barring local Non-bank financial institutions from buying Open Market Operations (OMO) Treasury Bills. This drove yields lower significantly in both the T-bills and bonds spaces in Q4'19. Further exacerbating the pressure on Market yields was the net maturities in excess of c.5.4trillion in the same period. Yields on T-Bills available to local investors (NTB) as a result dipped significantly from c.13% in October to c.5.8% at the last NTB Primary Market Auction (PMA) in December.

OUTLOOK:

We believe the CBN will keep conventional monetary policy tools at current levels for most of 2020, along with the divide between the OMO and T-bills markets for most of H1'20 in a bid to avoid capital reversals and attract more Foreign Portfolio Investments as Quantitative Easing increases in advanced economies.

This low yield environment and significant OMO maturities has created an ideal environment for local corporates to return to the market with Commercial Papers and bonds. Based on the current yield environment, we expect to see an increase in capital raises in the near-term, for as long as the CBN continues to restrict OMO activity.

We expect yields to remain moderated for the first half of the year. Hence, we intend to stay on the short end of the curve and take advantage of attractive short tenured debt issuances.
