MARKET COMMENTARY & OUTLOOK
REVIEW:

With the Central Bank of Nigeria joining the global rate hike trend, the local MPR rate increased by 100bps to 14.00% in July in reaction to surging inflation. As a result, we have seen steep selloffs across the bonds space. Yields continued to climb in August, as investors anticipated higher yields to be offered at the CBN's monthly bond and bi-weekly T-bills auctions.

Whilst the positive Q2'22 GDP numbers released during the month alleviated some near-term pressure on how investors assessed the long-term health of the Nigerian economy, we still expect yields to remain elevated as investors look to the CBN for guidance on future rate expectations in the secondary market.

Expectations are that the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) will hike rates again, in line with other global and regional central banks, as they remain aggressive in their fight against inflation. Should we see another 100bps rate hike, we expect this to filter into the NTB space, leading to sell-offs across the curve, as T-bills investors seek to curtail their losses from holding lower yielding tenors.

On a month-on-month basis, we had rebalanced our portfolio holdings adequately and took advantage of the higher yields offered in the fixed income space by money market instruments. The portfolio rebalancing led to the Vetiva Money Market Fund delivering an average yield of 8.11% in the month of August which was higher than the 91-day Tbill benchmark average yield of 4.53%.

Going forward, we expect to continue to take advantage of the higher yields offered by quality money market instruments in the fixed income space and rebalance our portfolio adequately to ensure competitive returns for the benefit of the unitholders.
