MARKET COMMENTARY & OUTLOOK
REVIEW:

The month of March opened on a bullish note as coupon inflows of about N355bn spurred improved demand across the NTB and bond auctions, with rates contracting. Marginal rates on the one-year paper moderated to 9.49% levels from 9.90% levels recorded in February, while marginal rates on the 2028 and 2032 maturities remained sticky at 14.00% and 14.75% levels. The long-dated maturities of 2037 and 2049 witnessed decent contraction in marginal rates at 15.20% and 15.75% levels due to sustained demand from PFAs, who ramped up volumes on that end.

However, the bullish run was short-lived as persistent auction oversales, NDIC premium debits of c.N2bn and CRR debits by the CBN threw the market into negative territory, with the market being over N600bn short. As a result, the last NTB auction of March was significantly undersubscribed, with a record low level of demand of N145bn. The marginal rate on the one-year paper closed at 14.74% level, the highest seen all year. The bearish momentum that dominated the second half of March was further exacerbated by the 50bps hike in MPR to 18.00% by the MPC at the March MPC meeting.

Money market rates across banks improved as they tried to shore up their balances to cater to day-to-day obligations, settling between 14.00% to 16.00%.

In April, the Fixed Income market is expected to remain under the grip of the bears, owing to the current significant system illiquidity. However, a positive shift is expected in the latter part of the month, as coupon and bond maturity inflows of approximately N1.12trn are anticipated to hit the system. The stance of the Debt Management Office (DMO) will also be a crucial factor in determining the direction of rates in April. It is believed that persistent rate management by allocating significant amounts to non-competitive bids might help to keep rates at relatively low levels.

We note that the portfolio effective yield outperformed the industry average yield during the quarter. Going forward, due to the anticipated rate hikes and lower cost of borrowing to corporates by issuing commercial paper in the market, we expect to see issuances of new commercial papers at higher yields and so, we expect to take advantage of these yields and to continually rebalance the portfolio adequately. However, should issuers close out on the Commercial papers, we intend to take advantage of fixed placements with approved counterparties on favourable terms for relatively short duration to enable quick reallocation where yields improve in subsequent quarters. Following this, we would continue to ensure the competitive return of the Vetiva Money Market Fund for the benefit of the unitholders.
